Boston, Aug. 5, 1845.

My dear McKim:

The letter written jointly by dear Lucretia Mott and yourself was duly received, and was read with great pleasure. Say to her that I shall be delighted once more to see her in the flesh, and to be a sojourner in her family. I have not seen or heard any thing directly from Wendell Phillips, but have written to him on the subject, and presume he will faithfully redeem his pledge, and be with us. Caroline Weston will accompany us, and one or two ^{female} friends from Plymouth rock. Douglass intended going with us, but cannot, as he is to sail in the Liverpool steamer, from this port, on the 16th inst., with James N. Buffum. As to my Sunday lectures, I will give you one on "The Sabbath, as a Christian institution," and another on "The Duty of Public Worship examined," or any other subject you may think best.

Yours, lovingly, Wm. Lloyd Garrison.
